1. What image do most people picture when they hear entrepreneur — and why does the video say that image is wrong?
2. The video names three things every entrepreneur needs. What are they?
3. What is the difference between a sole proprietorship, a partnership, and a corporation?

Part 2 — Video Summary

Read this summary carefully — the quiz is based on these key ideas.

Who entrepreneurs really are

- The word entrepreneur makes most people picture celebrities like Elon Musk or Oprah — but the video challenges that image immediately.
- Entrepreneurs exist in every industry: tech, food, fashion, community organizations, the gig economy, and more.
- Anyone can be an entrepreneur — it is not a personality type you are born with, it is a learnable skill set.
- The three things every entrepreneur needs according to the video: grit, determination, and a fair bit of luck.
- Even the video host, Anna Akana, is an entrepreneur — she built a creative business from her YouTube channel.

Types of business structures

- Sole proprietorship — one owner, simplest structure, owner is personally responsible for all debts.
- Partnership — two or more people share ownership, profits, and responsibility for the business.
- Corporation — a legally separate entity from its owners, which limits personal liability.
- The gig economy (Uber, Etsy, freelancing) is a modern form of entrepreneurship that blurs these structures.
- There is no single right structure — the best one depends on your goals, risk tolerance, and growth plans.

What entrepreneurship actually means

- It is about identifying a problem or opportunity and building a solution — not just making money.
- Entrepreneurs take on personal and financial risk in exchange for the potential of reward.
- Failure is a normal and expected part of entrepreneurship — what matters is not quitting.
- The goal is value creation: making something that other people find useful and are willing to pay for.
- Starting small is smart. A lemonade stand and a tech startup are both forms of entrepreneurship.

The entrepreneurial mindset

- Entrepreneurs see problems as opportunities rather than obstacles to avoid.
- You do not need a brand new idea — most successful businesses improve on something that already exists.
- Grit (passion + perseverance) matters more than talent or intelligence in predicting entrepreneurial success.
- The path is different for everyone — there is no single right way to be an entrepreneur.

Part 3 — Key Vocabulary
