Part 1 — Watch the Video First

Watch: Who Even Is An Entrepreneur? — Crash Course Business #1

URL: youtube.com/watch?v=aozlwC3XwfY (13 min)

1. The video mentions entrepreneurs like Beyoncé, Elon Musk, and Oprah. What do they all have in common as entrepreneurs — beyond fame?
2. Anna Akana herself is a young entrepreneur. What did she build, and what risks did she take to do it?
3. Which entrepreneur or example from the video do you find most relatable or inspiring, and why?

Part 2 — Video Summary

Read this summary carefully — the quiz is based on these key ideas.

Young entrepreneurs are not rare

- The video opens by showing entrepreneurship spans every industry and background — you do not have to be famous first.
- Anna Akana built a creative and business empire starting from YouTube — at a young age, with no outside funding.
- Entrepreneurship can start with a lemonade stand at age 4 (Mikaila Ulmer, Me & the Bees) or a bow tie company at age 9 (Moziah Bridges, Mo's Bows).
- What young founders have in common: they spotted a problem, started small, stayed consistent, and did not wait for permission.

What made them different — not talent, but mindset

- They did not wait until they were 'ready' — they started before they felt ready and learned as they went.
- They turned personal frustrations or passions into products other people wanted.
- They understood their 'why' before they understood their business — the mission came first.
- Many used their identity, background, or community as an advantage — building for people they knew best.

Lessons from young founders you can use right now

- Start with what you have — time, skills, a kitchen, a computer, or a passion. You already have enough.
- Solve YOUR problem first. If something annoys you and you cannot find a fix, other people probably have the same problem.
- Every big business was once tiny. Spanx started with $5,000. Amazon started in a garage. Mo's Bows started at grandma's kitchen table.

Famous Teen & Young Founders

Real people who built real things — what made them different

- Failure is part of the story — every young founder in the video hit setbacks and kept going anyway.

The three common ingredients

- Grit — they kept going when things got hard, when people said no, and when things failed.
- Determination — they set a direction and kept moving toward it even without a clear roadmap.
- Luck — they took action, which put them in a position for lucky breaks to happen.
